

Perforations

Last month we decided to table the plan to participate in the Lake County Fair because of limited man-hours, logistics for the exhibit and additional fees for members to gain access to the booth for manning purposes. The manning issue (50 hours) - given the timing of vacations over the last week in July was critical in the decision. Bill Schultz did all the of leg work in getting the proposal ready for review and with the 'last minute' requirements by the Fair's board made the issue unsupportable given the limited man-power available.

Additional items of discussion included the auction of donated material to the club. The distribution of proceeds will be 50% to the LCPS and 25% each to the APS and Lake County Post Card Museum. Further discussion and finalization is a topic of this months meeting.

We need to get a list of members in the APS. If you are a member, send in your name and number to the address on the bottom of page 2, e-mail it to webmaster@lcpshome.org or bring it into the meeting next week. If we have enough members it will save some money with our affiliation renewal.

We need also to think about the holiday brunch in December and how it fits in with the MSDA Holiday Stamp Show.

Note, additional 75th Anniversary stamps will be available at $10.00 per pane of ten for those of you who did not get in on the rush last month

Stamp Collecting on the Web. The Internet has become a major source of information and materials over the past ten years.

Being stationed overseas at various times between 1968 and 2003 illustrates the change in my collecting habits and interest.

Initially, I would collect just the stamps from the locations the Navy sent me - but the last tour to Japan (1998 - 2003) the Internet really opened up the field - primarily by introduction of eBay, secure electronic fund transfer and various National Post Offices (Canada, UK, US, Israel, Germany and the UN to list a few) using the computer to sell their products.

Mystic Stamps, ads in Linn's and trips to the military and Japanese post offices could not compete with the variety and time required to "shop" for and collect stamps.

The Internet allowed one to actually look at an image of the stamp and use e-mail to ask additional questions. It was actually during this last assignment that my collecting habits grew beyond that of U.S. and Japanese stamps - I was able to look at offerings from hundreds of dealers in a short period of time. (As an aside, it takes a dealer five-six minutes per item to scan and match the appropriate catalog information in order to produce a listing and then he must upload these listings to the auction/store web server - just think how many man-hours of work it takes a dealer to move just a small inventory to the web).

The downside of this evolution is the ability to rely get to talk to the dealer and get to know him. The Internet can be very impersonal.

From its humble and often bumbling beginnings in the mid 1990's, the Internet will most likely become the major source of stamps, material and information for collectors as travel cost force dealers to reconsider which shows they will attend. This will affect us, as collectors, by forcing us to become computer literate if we wish to continue to expand our knowledge and collections.

A collector does not need to own an Internet accessible computer. Most public libraries have set aside Internet accessible machines for public use and offer computer familiarization courses. The user of a public computer needs to have additional knowledge of security before embarking on a web shopping trip. Again, the public library has information available on how to safely buy things on the computer.

Beside ebay (ebay.com), there are several websites that deal in philatelic materials. The biggest new one (and now offering many more items than eBay) is a site called stampwants.com. As a comparison, ebay had (2008 June 16) 41,000 US, 7,000 Canadian, 35,000 European and 87,000 other items (including 665 Egyptian). StampWants, the upstart, has 750,000+ listings - the US with 255,000, Canada 47,600, Europe 196,000 with Egypt coming in with 1,816 items.

An interesting outgrowth about StampWants is that it cost effective for the average collectors who are more into "trading" stamps - unlike eBay. Additionally, the number of "stamp shops" has increased dramatically over the last six months on the site (from 12 to over 100) as hobbyist take advantage of this new style of 'trading'.

One problem, with growth of sites, I (and others) have found, is some of the shops offer the same stamp on eBay and StampWants and lose track of inventory and proceed to sell the same stamp twice. This problem has gotten better as dealers migrate from one site to the another depending on fees charged by the auction sites.

Information. For just basic information on stamps, the following three sites are worth looking at:

<http://www.1847USA.com> - primarily an identification site for U.S. Postage Stamps from 1847 - 1970 but has a broad range of information on general stamp collecting.

<http://album.dweb.org/> or Jim's Stamp Album - a graphical presentation of a US stamp collection with a nice stamp search based on Scott™ numbers. He is complete up through 2007.

<http://www.virtualstampclub.com/> - The Virtual Stamp Club. This site is good for looking at new issues and general articles on stamps.
